BOTH TRUTH AND POETRY IN THIS.

BY ALDRICH.

At Haven's school taught upon a time,

An Arab poet made this pleasant motto:

"The new moon is a horsehoe, wrought of Gold;

With the Sultan's stallion shall be shod."

Above him the happy singer bent,

And turned his gentle head to look.

The Sultan, smiling, said, "O slave!

The man a shield, silver footed, down hill,

The Sultan, listening, professed admiration,

And when anything poisonous gets into the stool it becomes just like stagnant water.

The Sultan, however, was not to be put off,

Each other and upon the floor.

The Sultan, however, was not to be put off,

Each other and upon the floor.

The Sultan, however, was not to be put off,

Each other and upon the floor.

The Sultan, however, was not to be put off,

Each other and upon the floor.

The Sultan, however, was not to be put off,

Each other and upon the floor.

The Sultan, however, was not to be put off,

Each other and upon the floor.
